PROSPEH

CONSCIOUS HOME

BY BGD.

If Prospeh is what you need, the imbalance shows up in your relationship with abundance, both in how safe you feel receiving it, and in how fully you let yourself enjoy what you already have.

If you're here, some part of you has been living with a quiet scarcity mindset, even when the numbers don't necessarily back it up. That's Prospeh energy asking to be let back in.

This mindset isn't even just about money. It's actually a pattern within your nervous system, formed years ago, that keeps you in a place of lack. A place of "what if I lose the things I've worked so hard to get?" That question runs quieter than fear, but it's just as loud in how it shapes your choices.

This shows up in money, yes, but it doesn't stop there. It carries into your attachment styles, into how tightly you hold onto people, plans, even your own routines, afraid that loosening your grip means losing what you've built.

It shows up in the small language you use with yourself too. "I don't have time." "I can't afford that right now." "There's never enough." Sometimes progress starts as simply as reframing that same thought. Trading "I don't have time" for "I have all the time I need." Trading "there's never enough" for "more is already on its way." Small shifts, but ones that tell your nervous system it's safe to stop bracing.

Here's the thing worth sitting with: that trigger you feel around wealth, that comparison, that low hum of "why not me," it shows up because abundance is actually attainable for you. It's not random. It's your own energy nudging you to acknowledge you want more, and that wanting more isn't wrong.

You might notice this shows up in contradictions. Splurging the moment you see a sale, then spiraling into regret. Or the opposite, watching every dollar so closely that you never actually feel the reward of your own hard work. Maybe you save your nicest things for the "right occasion," an occasion that somehow never comes, while they sit untouched.

Your space often mirrors this too. Guarding it, protecting it, keeping it "for good" instead of letting yourself actually live in it. Holding back on the things that would make your everyday feel as rich as the life you're picturing for yourself. That's not carefulness. That's a version of you still waiting for permission to enjoy your own life.

None of this means something is wrong with you. This is a moment almost everyone can relate to at one point or another. But when your Prospeh is balanced, it shows. You feel it in how naturally you receive, how easily you enjoy what you've already built, how little you need to prove. Because the Prospeh archetype carries the energy of an orchard in full bloom, generous, unhurried, never questioning its own abundance.

THAT'S THE VERSION OF YOU WAITING IN THE NEXT SECTION.

This is what your life looks like when Prospeh is in balance.

That old nervous system pattern starts to loosen. The one that kept whispering "what if I lose it," even when nothing was actually at risk. You start to notice the difference between real caution and old fear, and you stop letting the fear drive.

That shift doesn't just show up in your bank account. It shows up in how you love, too. You hold people, plans, and your own life a little more loosely, trusting that loosening your grip doesn't mean losing what you built. It means finally getting to enjoy it.

That same trust changes how you measure your life. The success of people around you starts to feel inspiring instead of like a countdown clock on your own worth, because you're no longer keeping score against a version of yourself that's always behind.

Money starts to feel like a tool instead of a source of anxiety. You spend without spiraling into guilt, and you save without white-knuckling every dollar. The "right occasion" stops being a far-off date and starts being now, today, this ordinary Tuesday that deserves the good candle just as much as any celebration would. Because you realize the occasion isn't coming to find you. You're the one who gets to decide what counts today.

Your work starts to feel less like a means to an end and more like an extension of who you are. You find purpose in what you do, not just a paycheck, and that shift makes ambition feel exciting instead of exhausting.

You start taking action instead of waiting for things to fall into your lap. Manifestation stops living only in your head and starts showing up in the small, consistent steps you take toward the life you keep picturing. A "no" from the universe stops feeling like rejection and starts feeling like redirection, because you trust there's something better already in motion for you.

Your home starts to reflect that same abundance. Quality over quantity. Pieces you actually love living with, chosen with intention rather than guilt or scarcity. Your space feels lived in, cherished now, not preserved for a someday that never arrives.

This is the quiet gift of a balanced Prospeh: abundance that isn't about how much you have, but how fully you let yourself enjoy what's already yours.

THE NEXT SECTION WALKS THROUGH EXACTLY HOW TO GET THERE, ONE INTENTIONAL STEP AT A TIME.

PROSPEH'S ESSENTIALS FOR THE BODY

Bay Leaves: Long used in cooking and traditional medicine, these leaves can be used in cooking or financial manifestation rituals to attract that energy.

Ground Nutmeg: It's believed to invite good luck and abundance when paired with other potent herbs.

Saffron: It's the world's most expensive spice, and for good reason. It takes time, commitment, and dedication to just reap a small portion of this highly coveted spice. Use it when cooking or in the color choice of the clothing & jewelry that adorns your body, to remind yourself of your true worth.

Ginger: Used for inner healing and also believed to assist in attracting good luck, wealth, and prosperity to your life.

Allspice: Commonly used in spells to encourage the inflow of money into your life. Add it to your meals or drinks to infuse them with this wealth magic.

Rosemary: A fragrant herb that helps attract good fortune. Try cooking with it or drinking it as tea to enhance your chances of prosperity.

PROSPEH'S ESSENTIALS FOR THE SOUL

Crystals: Citrine (Lures In Abundance) Tiger's Eye (Increases Confidence), Green Aventurine (Imparts Gratitude), Lapis Lazuli (Boosts Confidence), Jade (Brings Prosperity & Good Fortune), Moldavite (New Beginnings), Fluorite (Aids In Creativity), and Amber (Courage).

Essential Oils: Peppermint (Increases Mental Agility), Bergamot (Calms Emotions), and Jasmine (Attracts Abundance).
